Quick and Handy Grammar Review

THE SIMPLE FUTURE: THREE FORMS

There are three ways to express a future time in English:
will + base verb, be going to + base verb, or be + -ing verb.
How and when do we use these forms?

A. Will + Base Verb

This form is used when you are deciding future plans at the moment.

For example, if someone invited you to go to a party next Friday, you could answer, “Sure, I will go with you.”

Will + base verb is the most formal way of forming the future tense.

Examples:
• A: Do you two want to go to the movies later?
  B: Sure, we will go.
• She will do whatever her mother tells her to do.
• When you enter the room on Monday, you will see a sign-up sheet on the table.

B. Be Going To + Base Verb

This form is used when plans have already been made in advance.

For example, if you have plans to go camping next weekend and someone asks you what you are going to do, you could answer, “I’m going to go camping next weekend.”

Be going to + base verb is more casual than will + base verb. It is also more common than be + -ing verb.

Examples:
• He is going to study all night for his test.
• They are going to go to Disneyland next spring.
• I am definitely going to call you tomorrow.

Note:
The be verb is conjugated according to the subject (am, are, is).

Pronunciation Note:
Going to sounds like gonna. Use gonna when speaking, but never write gonna!

C. Be + -ing Verb

Sometimes English speakers use the present progressive as a future form. It is used the same way as be going to (when plans are already made). For example, if you have plans to go camping next weekend and someone asks you what you are going to do, you could answer, “I’m going camping next weekend.”

The present progressive is a casual way of forming the future. It is most often used for the near future (tonight, tomorrow, next weekend, etc.).

Examples:

• My roommate is going to Hawaii next weekend.
• We are planning to discuss this at the next meeting.
• I am calling him back tomorrow after class.

Note:
The be verb is conjugated according to the subject (am, are, is).

D. Did You Know?

Note #1:
WHAT ARE SOME COMMON FUTURE TIME MARKERS IN ENGLISH?

Time markers are words that show the time (past, present, or future) of a sentence in English. Common time markers for the future include:

• tomorrow
• the day after tomorrow
• next (next week, next month, next year, etc.)
• from now (two days from now, three weeks from now, etc.)
• in (in four days, in two months, etc.)
• when (when two future sentences are joined together—see note #2)

Note #2:
WHAT HAPPENS WHEN WE USE TWO FUTURE VERBS IN THE SAME SENTENCE?

1. English does NOT use a future form twice in most sentences! The simple future form is used in the independent clause and the simple present is used in the dependent clause.

2. The order of the clauses can change in a sentence with no difference in meaning, so the best way to know which clause is dependent (and requires a present verb) is to look for the adverb of time (when, while, etc.). When a sentence begins with a dependent clause, a comma must be used.

3. The verb in the dependent clause is in the simple present tense, so third person singular subjects take a verb ending in -s.

Examples:

• He will call you when he arrives in Las Vegas tomorrow. / When he arrives in Las Vegas tomorrow, he will call you.
• We are going to study for the final exam when my friends come over next weekend. / When my friends come over next weekend, we are going to study for the final exam.
• She is going to apply to university when she graduates. / When she graduates, she is going to apply to university.
